Designing can be viewed as a search for essential form. It occurs at the point where man's social and material needs meet his expressive and productive potential.

In pursuit of this idea, C-MU's Design Department is moving to eliminate the boundaries between design specializations. The Faculty and students participate in a broad view of designing as a fundamental human activity and focused experiences in basic skills relating to awareness, ideation, and execution. These are our collective priorities.

23 Designers, the Design Department's first public exhibit of senior work, is the culmination of a project which required each senior to identify his or her individual, personal and professional priorities, and express them through an exhibit of current work.

Many people, including all the seniors, provided the time, effort and materials which made the exhibit possible.

Special thanks are due to Gil Daniels and the staff of Hunt Institute, especially John Brindle and Joe Calcutta.
